Sejm Lays Groundwork For Amnesty in Poland

By Dan Fisher

Los Angeles Times Service WARSAW — The Polish parliament approved Wednesday a series of constitutional amendments and began considering a conditional amnesty for some political prisoners in moves that were expected to lay the groundwork for a lifting of

The actions came amid new evidence that the Polish economy was stagnating under the pressure of Western economic sanctions. The Polish authorities hope the sanctions will be eased in response to their moves toward political normalization, which appear increasingly to be largely cosmetic.

Despite objections by the leader-

The Politburo last week accused officials at the plant of "gross vio-lations of state discipline."

The Kremlin also announced the formation of a state committee for safety in the nuclear power industry, a move Western diplomats said was a sure sign there had been an accident at Atommash.

A candidate member of the Politburo, Vladimir Dolgikh, visited Atommash on Tuesday and delivered a speech in Volgodonsk strongly criticizing the plant's management and workers.

Such a succession of events has been usual in the past only when a serious accident has occurred involving loss of life, diplomats said Pravda said the problems in Volgodonsk had affected not only the plant but the construction of apart-

Atommash, which started limit-ed production two years ago, was to turn out equipment for six power stations by 1985.

Disabilities in U.S. Babies Found to Have Doubled in 25 Years

NEW YORK -- Physicians and statisticians who analyze patterns of births in the United States have concluded that the number of babies born with some physical or mental defect has doubled over the past 25 years.

Translated into total numbers by one group of investigators at the University of California, this means that about 140,000 bables born this year will suffer from physical abnormalities, mental re-tardazion or learning problems. In the late 1950s that number was about 70,000.

While termed an amnesty, it more resembles a parole in some ways. One provision, for example, stipulates that if a person commits an offense between now and the end of 1985 that is similar to the one for which he was pardoned, he must serve the balance of his original sentence.

As expected, the draft decree rules out any early release for a dozen senior figures from Solidarity and the Committee for Workers' Social Self-Defense, or KOR, a dissident group that worked closely with Solidarity leaders.

All 12 are being held pending formal indictment on sedition charges specifically excluded from the anmesty provisions.

An uncertain number of other political prisoners who received scatences exceeding three years are also not to be granted automatic freedom. However, another provision allows the supreme court or chief prosecutor to release them by special order if their offenses are

West Germany after Jan. 1, 1986.

"The chancellor does not want to act along the convoy system, which has the slowest dictate the speed," and Peter Bönisch, the government spokesman. This was an obvious reference to objections by European Community countries like Italy and France that consider the move to reduce exhaust pollution too expensive for their motorists.

Industry sources estimate the estalytic converters will make nondiesel cars more expensive by about 1,000 marks ($400).

"If the circumstances require it, I would not hesitate to conclude a treaty of friendship with Moscow. On the other hand, we would stand against the U.S.S.R. if it started behaving like the United States." He accused the United States and France of seeking to transform the civil war in Chad "from a purely internal affair into a confrontation between imperialism and a people sspiring to achieve freedom."

Pretoria Slows Traffic From Lesotho

FICKSBURG, South Africa (AP) - Long delays developed Wednesday for Lesotho citizens crossing into South Africa as Pretoria put tighter border controls into effect. Traffic from South Africa into Lesotho was not affected, the South African Press Association said.

The slowdown reflected growing tension between the mountain king-dom and South Africa, which surrounds it. The restrictions were an apparent attempt to force Lesotho, which is dependent on South Africa economically, to crack down on South African croiles. South Africa accuses Lesotho of allowing guerrillas of the outlawed African National Congress to work from there in their campaign to end white rule in South Africa. Lesotho says South Africa is harboring Lesotho Liberation Army guerrillas trying to topple the government of the prime minister, Chief Leabus Jonathan.

Catholic Paper Endures In a Secularized France

No Longer Fighting Anti-Clericalism, La Croix Shares Some Ideas With Left

By E.J. Dionne Jr.

New York Tones Service PARIS - "In our view, the daily press is the plague of our era," said the editorial in the very first issue. "The best of the newspapers are worth nothing."

The words were written 100 years ago last month by the Rev. François Picard. With them, he and a group of Assumptionist priests launched La Crox, a daily newspaper determined to preach the religious order's combative, monar-chist version of Roman Catholicism to what was rapidly becoming one of the most secular countries in the West.

La Croix is celebrating its 100th anniversary this summer, but its founders might have some difficul-ty in recognizing what has become of their journal, or indeed their religious order.

"If I refer to the first editorial of the paper, it saw the rights of man as opposed to the rights of God," said the Rev. Noël Copin, a well-known television journalist who began his career at La Croix and recently returned as its managing editor. "Today the cause of the rights of man is one of the permaneut themes of our combat."

So is support for democracy, the welfare state and help for the Third

The changes in the paper and in the Assumptionist order reflect one of the most profound shifts in French life over the last three decades: a virtual end to the struggle between Catholicism and the secular republic, and the blossoming of a variety of relationships between French Catholicism and the politithe College of the Assumption in Numes, his purpose was largely to fight the French republic and its secular doctrines.

How profound was the antipathy between the church and the anticlerical left? To answer, the Rev. Henri Guillemin, an Assumptionist official, took a recent visitor to the Assumptionists' Paris headquarters down a corridor for a look at a 13th-century statue of Our Lady of Salvation.

"If you notice, the nose was orig-inally chipped off, and there's dam-age to the face and the arms, and to the Baby Jesus in her arms," he said. That happened when a sup-porter of the Paris Commune of 1871 shot the statue in the face, and then took a hammer to it,"

Originally, the Assumptionists sooght to restore the church through religious education and pilgrimages to holy places. In 1873, as part of the latter mission, they started a magazine called The Pil-grim. That, said Father Guillemin, is when the order learned the power of the press.

Ten years later La Croix was born and the history of the order, its daily and French Catholicism have been intertwined ever since. "At the beginning La Croix was monarchist, nationalist and anti-Semitic," said the Rev. Charles Monsch, who after 34 years as the paper's chief librarian serves as what one journalist described as "the ministry of memory."

Despite an anticlerical government's efforts to shut the paper down at the turn of the century by temporarily throwing the Assump-tionists out of France, La Croix prospered. During the German co-cupation from 1940 to 1944, La Croix was a mixture of Vatican pronouncements and articles sym-

Vichy messages if they read between the lines, and while most Vichyite papers were shut down, La Croix was allowed to remain open after the liberation.

It was in the postwar period that the new French Catholic church was born, and the Assumptionists reflected the change.

"None of us were the same after the war," said Father Guillemin.

In the mid-1950s a new La Croix also began to take shape. It dropped the crucifix from its mast-head and its style began to resemble that of a modern daily - and a cal-secular battles are over.

Politically, the paper and the order embraced the modern world, moving toward a kind of centrist progressivism that increasingly characterized the church's approach to politics.

Today the influence of what Father Monsch called social Catholicism can be seen in both the governing Socialist Party and in the opposition. The church and the Socialist government are skirmishing over the role of religious schools but for the most part, the old cleri-

Maltese Problem' Not New

York Times reported from Madrid: Malta's refusal to yield on its demand left diplomats from other nations playing a waiting game designed to pressure the Maltese into giving up their quest. On Tuesday, exasperated diplomats filed in for a four-minute session behind closes doors in which the only order of business was an announcement to meet again on Wednesday. The "Maltese problem," as some of the delegates are calling it, is not new. During a previous follow-up conference to the 1975 Helsinki agreement, Malta delayed the con-clusion of the proceedings for two days with the same demand. That conference, held in Belgrade in 1977 and 1978, ended in failure because the West and the Soviet

Los Angeles Times Service WASHINGTON — The Food and Drug Administration an-nounced Tuesday that it would take action to prevent the sale of emproven "sobriety products," declaring them "a threat to the safety of motorists and pedestrians."

Citing the more than 25,000 alcohol-related traffic deaths that occur in the United States every year, the agency said it would classify any product designed to prevent or minimize inebriation as a "new drug." The products, which at least three U.S. firms are planning to manufacture, thus could not be marketed unless studies first prove them safe and effective.

Terms for Brazil

The negotiations on Brazil's foreign debts raise doubts that North Americans should ponder carefully. A few months ago the International Monetary Fund extended a further large loan to enable Brazil to keep its credit lines open and avoid default on the past loans, but the condition was a policy of rigorous austerity to be imposed on the Brazilian economy. By May it was evident that Brazil was not meeting the targets, and the IMF froze further access to the loan. It is not a question of bad faith; it can be argued that the targets were unrealistic from the beginning. The latest talks are an attempt to work out new terms.

The IMF knows that it cannot let go of the principle of enforced conditions. It cannot put itself in the position of financing more of the itself in the position of mancing more of the same policies that got the debtors into trouble in the first place. But neither can it press the principle so hard that it incites upheaval in Brazil—where unemployment is already high. The central issues here are not the esoteric financial arrangements. To pay off their debts to North American and European banks, Brazil and the other Latin debtors need to be able to sell in the North American and European markets. Rigorous management of internal fis-cal affairs is highly desirable, but the crucial factor is the economic recovery now beginning in the United States and, less certainly, in Europe. With strong and sustained growth, the rich countries will suck in Latin exports in great volumes and make it possible for Latin debtors to pay their way out of their hole without great distress. But if that kind of a growth rate does not develop in the northern bemisphere, no amount of austerity to the south will make repayment possible.

It is useful to recall that those debts originated in the first oil crisis a decade ago. Because the Latin countries borrowed to keep their economies developing, they continued to buy U.S. exports - an important contribution to U.S. prosperity during the decade. That process also works in reverse. If the Latin economies are now forced into super-austerity. they are not going to be very good customers. The dollars that Brazil must devote to debt service are dollars that it cannot spend ou imports from the United States. That is another reason for North Americans to have another look at those debt schedules. They have implications for jobs in U.S. factories.

The disquieting thing about the latest debt negotiations is that they have become a process of patching along, avoiding disaster, but on the basis of plans that depend on slightly improbable growth rates in the industrial world. Something more durable and more hopeful is required. It will take political leadership that will have to come not from the technicians who run the IMF but from the politicians who run the United States government.

A Job for Kissinger

ft might have been arms control and should have been the Middle East. Instead it is the palpable dread of disaster in Central America that has impelled the Reagan administration to seek the help of Henry Kissinger.

If the former secretary of state is wanted to supply a sense of global perspective to two years of panicky military responses, a lot of Reagan rhetoric and CIA plotting are going to have to be artfully buried. If, however, he is wanted mainly to polish up a failing policy, he will again provide only the verbal gloss for a destructive foreign venture.

ft's a long, long way from July to December, when Mr. Kissinger's commission is to give its report. To make the commission's deliberations meaningful, Mr. Reagan needs to put on hold any interventionist designs against Nica-ragua or Cuba and any military plans that may involve more U.S. forces in El Salvador.

Mr. Kissinger cannot sell what Mr. Reagan has so plainly failed to sell. He can contribute only by redesigning the policies that have produced the president's desperation.

It is not just some communications failure that explains the lack of public support for Mr. Reagan's approaches to Central America. Polls show that most Americans do not even know whether he is backing the government in El Salvador and the insurgents in Nicaragua or vice versa. But most also do not share the president's sense of peril, and the bestinformed tend to be the most skeptical.

threaten the United States - and how much? Why, if that regime is not marked by Washington for overthrow, can it not be easily insulated from El Salvador's civil war? Why is "our" side in El Salvador incapable of the most elementary respect for human rights that would broaden its appeal and remove its repu-tation for comption? Why, in any case, is this fixation with Central America diverting attention and resources from even more pressing crises in the Western Hemisphere, like the austerity now jeopardizing a democratic transition in Brazil? To those doubts and fears the administration has responded mainly with slogans and disingenuous mumbles.

An extraordinary commission of citizens is at best a poor way of giving a reasoned answer. What is more, the failure to appoint to it some notable doubters, like Senators Mathias or Moynihan, can only diminish its influence.

Still, Mr. Kissinger's diplomatic gifts are as outsized as his faults. And he understands the piranha ways of bureaucracy, perhaps too well. He needs no tutoring on his own valuera-bility as a devious meddler against an elected leftist regime in Chile and as a coddler of Latin dictators. One must assume that he wants no suicide mission into history.

The prize in Central America is to locate the space for compromise before much more that precious is lost. Blueprints for a Marshall Plan of aid will lead nowhere if the present martial plans are not put aside. Even the anthors of those proposals smell their failure as they seek a 40-percent increase for covert and overt military operations in Central America. Such an increase, an administration report concedes, "may be perceived as incremental escalation to stave off defeat for the time being, without any clear strategy for success an awkward parallel with Vietnam."

The parallel is sinister as well as awkward. As Mr. Kissinger's appointment was announced, so were war games in the Caribbean, with the aim of showing that U.S. naval ships can blockade Nicaragua. When Senator Jackson proposed the idea of a commission on Central America, he pleaded for creativity to end a policy paralysis - not for a prestigious endorsement of incremental interventionism.

Given time and room to maneuver. Mr. Kissinger might still vindicate the arts of diplomacy. If that is not what the president wants, this commission is pointless and no place for honorable service.

A More Careful Look at Assad's Syria

WASHINGTON — No country in the Mid-dle East is more misunderstood than Syris. The conventional image of Syria, created by a combination of Syrian declaratory extremism and anti-Syrian propaganda, portrays it as violently anti-American, a Soviet satellite, Qadhafi-like in its rejection of Middle East peace, near-Marxist in its political ideology and eager to go to war with Israel. None of that is true.

The vast majority of Syrians are well disposed toward Americans, and a great number have relatives living as citizens in the United States. Despite a recent increase in Soviet protective support, Syrian President Hafez al-Assad remains in control of Syrian foreign policy and keeps the door open to the United States.

Mr. Assad is fundamentally a political moderate posing as a radical. He is on record as supporting United Nations Security Council Resolution 242 calling for an Arab commitment to make peace with Israel in return for Israeli withdrawal from occupied territories.

The regime is essentially non-ideological; it keeps the local Communist Party under tight rein. A cardinal tenet of Mr. Assad's policy is to avoid a full-scale war with Israel, since he knows that Syria would be beaten badly and that his minority Alawite regime would be jeopardy.

Why then is the Syrian government so obstinate and antagonistic? Now that Israel and Lebanon have signed a withdrawal agreement, why doesn't Syria agree to withdraw its troops? A primary reason is that Mr. Assad is upset that Israel is being rewarded for its invasion of Lebanon. He refuses to equate Syria's "legiti-mate" presence in Lebanon with Israel's "illegiti-mate" presence. Syria therefore insists on uncon-ditional Israeli withdrawal. Should the Syrians ever back down from this position, they would seek to dissociate any eventual Syrian withdrawal from the Israeli-Lebanese agreement. Second, Mr. Assad believes that only by acting in concert from a position of strength can the Arabs ever prevail upon Israel to make the necessary concessions for a peace satisfactory to the Arabs. He sees the normalization of Israeli-Lebanese relations flowing from the withdrawal agreement as one more Arab defection weakening the negotiating weight of the Arab whole.

Third, he harbors a lingering resentment toward the United States, which mediated the

Mr. Assad felt let down by Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, who was mable to parlay the first Syrian-Israeli disengagement agreement in 1974 into a comprehensive settlement.

Mr. Assad thought President Carter backed out of a personal commitment made in 1977 to solve the Palestine problem, and he reasoned that Mr. Carter reduced pressure on Israel to withdraw from the Golan Heights by taking Egypt out of the Arab power equation through the Camp David agreement.

He sees the shipment of the most sophisticated

By Talcott W. Seelye

U.S. military equipment to Israel as building up an Israeli military machine that threatens his existence. He feels that, in general, the United States has ignored both Syria's concerns and its pivotal position in the area. Fourth, Mr. Assad is now determined to pursue no Lebanese arrangement in isolation from wider regional considerations. Where does all this leave the United States? It is unfortunate that the nature of Secretary of State George Shultz's recent visit to Damascus was misunderstood by the media and interpreted as a major U.S. policy failure. The visit should have been viewed as a step to expand the U.S. Syrian dialogne, so long neglected. Certainly no knowledgeable U.S. official was naive enough to believe that Mr. Assad was about to agree to withdraw his troops from Lebanon.

This evolving high-level dialogue, which has led to formation of a U.S.-Syrian working commission to consult on Lebanon, is important. It improves the general atmospherics, and the existence of the commission suggests that Mr. Assad may be keeping his options open. If America can idress Mr. Assad's major concerns, even partially, it might make some headway.

First, it should emphasize that it recognizes the differences in the Syrian and Israeli military sences and should agree that a Syrian withdrawal could be dissociated from the Israeli-Lebanese agreement. And it must take appropriate account of Syria's security concerns. Second, Syria's objections to the terms of the agreement might be alleviated if the Israelis undertook a undateral withdrawal. Such a withdrawal would demonstrate to Mr. Assad the sincerity of the Israelis' undertaking to withdraw and to minimize their future presence in Lebenon. This could be a critical factor in triggering a Syrian withdrawal. Like the Israelis, of course, the Syrians would insist upon retaining a residual presence - in the Bekan Valley.

Third, Washington must demonstrate to Mr. Assad's satisfaction that its word is credible and that it is not being led around by the israelis. In this connection, Mr. Assad definitely wants the Golan Heights back, since he feels some person-al responsibility for loss of the Golan in 1967.

Since Syria's claim to this territory is irrefutable from the standpoint of international law. Israel's annexation of it must be reversed. Unless the United States deals with this issue more effectively, it can expect little responsiveness from Mr. Assad on withdrawal.

A continuing, strong, public U.S. comm to Lebanon's sovereignty is also a necessity, both as a signal to Syria and as reassurance to the Lebanese government. Such a commitment helps the Lebanese regime to live with the reality that whatever happens, Syria for historical and politi-cal reasons can be expected to retain important offinence in Lebanon. This reality is a reason why Syria eventually might find it possible to pull out at least most of its troops, if the Israelis do the same.

A Notion Half the Soviet People Seem to Believe

WASHINGTON - My recent conversation with the Moscow taxi driver was at first no different from others I had had during a visit to the Soviet Union. I had expected differences with Soviet people, but not such explosive ones. Nor was the taxi driver my only apitated conversationalist Other Soviet citizens f spoke to about matters of war and peace --not only taxi drivers but also scientists, engineers, physicians — ex-pressed similar views, often with equal feeling. Most of them insisted that the Soviet leaders want only peace and that their American counterparts want only war. Their insistence was so strong and so persistent that f began to realize that, in the main, they really meant it. And the longer I stayed in their country, the better I understood why.

Everything that the Soviet people ghanistan? Afghanistan is on our read and see tells them that America is planning war. Everything - news-papers, radio, television. The nightly news programs repeatedly show Soviet leaders holding peaceful negotiations with visiting diplomats, and contrast those meetings with Vict-nam-era clips of American soldiers on troop carriers and American fight-or jets poised on military runways.

Soviet leaders are portrayed as interested primarily in their country's agriculture and industry; they turn to foreign and military affairs only unwillingly, when the beligerence of the United States forces them to defend the Soviet Union and the world from capitalist expansionism. American leaders, on the other hand, unremittingly pursue world domination despite poverty, unemployment, inequality and moral cor-ruption at home. It is such efforts, Yuri Andropov insisted a few weeks ago, that are "the true roots of evil perpetrated in the world." One evening, at dinner at the home of Moscow intellectuals, f asked how much the Soviet people believe of what they read and see. "Fifty percent of them," one re-plied, after consulting with the rest, "believe 50 percent of it. A smaller percentage in the big cities, a greater percentage in the countryside. But many believe it. They really do."

They really believe we're evil?" "They really do." The writer is a fellow of the Wood-row Wilson International Center for

Newsmen Work for The Reader

By David S. Broder

WASHINGTON — As an off-shoot of the Carter papers case we are bearing a new version of the old line, "Everybody does it." This time it is being said of journalists in our sometime role as advisers to political campain

George F. Will, the columnist and television commentator, has acknowledged seeing some copies of then President Carter's files among papers on the kitchen table of David A. Stockman before the two men belped prepare Ronald Reagan for his 1980 debate with Mr. Carter, Mr. Will's role on the preparation team had been publicized at the time; when it came up again, in the content of the possibly purioused papers, it stirred fresh debate.

My intention was to keep my mouth shut. Mr. Will is a good friend. I regard him as the best hope for genuine intellectual distinction that journalism has produced since Walter Lippmann. Besides, it is difficult to write about "journalistic ethics" without sounding like a jeck.

But f cannot accept, or let my silence seem to lend assent to, the widespread notion that "everybody does it." There is too much danger in that myth taking hold.

When viewers turn on television commentary these days, the journalists they see are often straight out of the political world - often from previous White House staffs. One election's losers now easily become the next election's pundits.

But it is not just these gypties who suggest that the line of distinction between politicians and journalists is fuzzy. My friend and colleague of 23 years, columnist Mary McGrory, has written, "Scratch a scribe in this town and you find a campaign manager."

The message that the public must take from all this is that "everybody dentity."

does it." It's not true. More than 20 years on the press bus have shown me fewer journalists peddling advice to politicisms than there are writing advice to the lovelorn.

When I was a pup on my first presidential campaign, f was given the best advice I ever received from the best political reporter and columnist I know. Alan L. Otten of the Wall Street Journal. He observed that several of our press colleagues had been seduced by the charm of John F. Kennedy into thinking themselves assistant campaign managers and, as happens in such cases, had made themselves ridiculous in the process. Mr. Otten said that on the roller coaster of intense emotions of politics and government it is easy for reporters to think of "our campaign" or "our administration." Easy -and fatal. He said there was only one way to remain reasonably straight: "Al-ways set yourself to lean a bit against the people you're covering and hope whoever is covering the opposition for your paper does the same thing."

The need to fight off the impulse to camaraderie — to maintain an adversarial posture, if you will - is one thing that precludes the intimacy of an adviser's role. But there is a more important reason: As journal ists, our responsibility is to readers. Anything we learn, or think, belongs first to the reader, not to a politician friend. We owe that reader the fullest and fairest rendition of the facts we can provide, and the clearest judgment we can muster, unimpeded by the wish to see some privately recommended strategy fulfilled. That obligation does not change if we call ourselves reporters or commentators. For the privilege of being political journalists, we accept certain inhibi-tions. One of them is forsaking the role of political activists or strategists. ft may not be unethical to do both, but it is surely greedy.

These are the considerations that make it easy for most political journalists to deaur when a politicism asks the flattering question, "What do you think I should do?" The answer is simple. "You want to know what f think? Buy the paper.

It only costs a quarter. You get the ball scores and comics - and they toss in my advice for nothing. Which is probably what it's worth. The Washington Post.

For example, Amnesty's 1982 report, which begins with a commentary on "political killings by governments," makes no mention of the killings, kidnappings, bombings and other terrorist activities of the communist-backed "rebels or insurgents" who plague the world.

Guatemala and El Salvador received 11 pages of the report's criticism between them, while Cuba and Nicaragua received a total of six. East and West Germany were each covered by two pages. Communist China received four pages, while little Tai-wan was criticized with three. The United States received only one page less than Communist China.

South Korea received five pages of Amnesty's wrath, while the Orwellian North got less than one page. Amnesty has explained in the past

Haute Couture: The Prestige Business Investment

By Hebe Dorsev

Hante countre, fashion's pinna-cle of price and prestige, has long been a losing venture in a glamorous and creative design adventure. However, much to everyone's surprise, a few years ago many conture houses learned how to become profitable: by merchandising the mystique of the couture name and reputation as the flag of multinational, highly licensed fa-

Not surprisingly, the marketing value of owning a conture house has become apparent to aggressive marketers. Avon, the giant Amerithe Japanese ready-to-wear mannfacturer, Itokin recently bought into the French continue market. In 1981, Avon signed a perfume licensing agreement with Lonis Fer-aud, which, the designer said, resulted in an enormous business turnover last year. With such incentive, a financially flush Ferand said he is spending 3.5 million francs, (approximately $47,000), or one million more francs than usual on his conture collection. The latter will be shown next Wednesday with quite a fanfare and accessorized with Tiffany jewelry (another Avon subsidiary), to 1,000 guests at the Théâtre Jean-Louis Barrault; instead of at Férand's smallish sa-

As for André Countiges, who sold 65 percent of his countre house to Itokim in early 1983, he will be the first time in three years. Courrèges said Itokin is planning a vast licensing program and needs the prestige of a couture name. He also said that he was bappy to be back

Financial assets aside, a recent survey of conture houses revealed that they have been doing a surpris-ingly brisk business with private customers as well, of which there are about 3,000 in the world, according to a spokesman for the Chambre Syndicale de la Couture Parisienne. Of course, it was done. For Pin-cider, the world's oldest, most ex-perienced engravers, with every color of ink in the rainbow, it was a shap. They were also happy to oblige Richard Nixon (then just an aspiring nobody) who bought Pincider calling cards, Giovani Agnelli, Snphia Loren, Tammy Grimes, Harry Winston, Oriana Fallaci, and the American Express Company. It is even rumored that Someone" in the Vatican prepares

"We don't like to call it just 'sta-tionery'," said Marcello Papi, gen-eral director for all Pineider stores, "we call it 'fine writing paper' and treat it as something special." In-

So what gives Pineider its panache? Merely a cachet that dates back to 1774 when the family of Austrian currency exchangers, sta-tioners, and engravers moved to Florence and flung open their shop doors on the Piazza Signoria where the shop remains today. It quickly became a rendez-vous point for politicians, artists and writers like Shelley, Stendhal and Byron —and developed into a salon, a center of intellectual exchange. Artists showed their work there and Pin-eider began selling prints which still bring a high price at French and Italian flea markets. Even toof Pincider's draw.

By the early 1900s, knowledge of Pineider craftmanship had spread among the royal and famous until they had become the official printers and engravers for all European nobility — from the Hapsburgs to the kings and queens of Spain. They retired their corrency business and expanded their chain of stores. Five generations later, the family that has done almost no formal advertising is still known worldwide.

"Even the postman knows who we are," Papi said, "Once someone addressed a letter to Pincider, Ita-

What makes Pincider different from other printers, he said, "is that we custom design anything — from a 15-color coat of arms, to the Florentine landscape seen from your apartment window." But Pin-cider is also selling variety: raised enamel inks that come in every color imaginable (even Liz Taylor lavender), paper in 10 shades of brights and pales, and 25 types of letter sets. In this highly computer-ized, assembly-line era, Pincider sells old-fashioned care. All the papers are hand-brushed, hand-packaged, and the deckle edges on some bring back memories of the original water-cut papers of times past.

Today Pineider has nine stores in Italy (Florence, Rome, Milan, Padova, Viareggio and Canania). And four months ago opened its first store outside Italy in New York City's Trump Tower where manager Robert Cozzoli, says the stationer is discovering a "whole new clientele," young apwardly mobile types who shop Pincider for social day, the beautiful art prints sold on stationery and wedding invitations.

With seemingly unlimited funds, they do not bother with the collections but make such massive and individual orders that the house of Dior, for one, has appointed a special designer, working ex-clusively for the Arab market "under my supervision, of course," Bohan said. At Chanel, on the other hand, 50 percent of the couture clients are French, according to designer Karl Lagerfeld. "A lot of them come from the provinces, order from sketches and are totally unknown. It's really bizarre," he said.

For Scherrer, the biggest change in the conture customer is the fact that she does not stick to a single house any more but shops around and makes no bones about it. "I realized that my four years in college had been wasted, that I wanted to direct a restaurant," he recalls. From there he went to a tiny restaurant in Salon de Provence, "where I learned even more because I did everything," and on to a chain of jobs in such illustrious kitchens as L'Archestrate, Lameloise in Chagny, Burgundy, La Varenne cooking school and a stint in Legrand's wine shop in the rue de la Banque, Paris. It was during his jub with the Provost Charenterie in Paris - "no salary, but all the paté I could eat" - that Noah hit upon the idea that other people would enjoy learning behind the scenes in the kitchens of the great as he had, and Paris en Cuisine was born.

Encouraged by Legrand, Spurri-er and Roland Barthelemy, owner of the superb cheese shop in the rue de Grenelle, Paris en Cuisine stuck to Parisian gastronomy for three years before branching out to the famed restaurants of the provinces. For the amateur connoisseur much of the charm is due to Noah's genius for custom-tailoring his visits to his clients' whims. He doesn't expect them, or their spouses, to be single-minded eaters. Fashian shows, visits to the Hermes workshops or the Sèvres porcelain musetennis in the country, can be combined with the governet food.

A very long way from May 1968: the year the RATP image hit the pits. It really wasn't its fault, but during that month of near revolution, one of the most telling student graffid raised along with the paving stones was "Métro, Boulot, Dodo". The cry of "Subway, Work, Sleep" encapsulated the total alienation of urban masses trapped in a dreary treadmill at the bottom end of a consumer society.

Mathematician Solves Number-Theory Puzzle

By Philip M. Boffey

WASHINGTON — A West German has solved a problem that has baffled mathematicians for more than 60 years and has taken a major step toward solving another that has stumped the profession for

The mathematician is Dr. Gerd Faltings, 29, of Wuppertal University. The problems he has solved lie in the esoteric realms of number theory and algebraic geometry; they relate to the number of solutions that exist for certain kinds of mathematical equations.

A 40-page manuscript by Dr. Faltings, circulating among U.S. mathematicians, is creating ripples of excitement.

Serge Lang, professor of mathematics at Yale University, said Dr. Faltings had solved "one of the outstanding problems of the century."

Michael Artin, professor of mathematics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, called the paper "extremely important" and said Dr. Faltings' accomplishment was "certainly close" to being "the theorem of the century," at least in the field of number theory.

Barris Mercus reoference of mathematics at Haviard University called it.

Barry Mazur, professor of mathematics at Harvard University, called it "a glorious piece of work, which will be closely studied by everyone in the field." Spencer Bloch, a University of Chicago mathematician, told the journal Science that the achievement "answers questions that seemed absolutely unanswerable before."

The accomplishment was so striking and so unexpected that mathematicians at Harvard and MIT recently interrupted their relaxed summer schedules for an intense series of seminars on the paper and its implications, and their colleagues at the University of Chicago and other institutions have made plans to teach courses on the subject in the next

The most eye-catching element of the Dr. Faltings' achievement was his proof of the validity of the so-called Mordell conjecture, an educated guess about the nature of mathematical solutions to certain equations. In 1922, Lewis J. Mordell, a British mathematician, suggested that a large class of equations had a finite number of rational solutions. This is a Malaria Vaccine Advance Reported matter of great importance to experts who must have some understanding of how many answers there are to a given problem and what the nature of those answers might be.

The chief limitation of the value of the proof is that it does not provide a technique to determine how many solutions a given equation might have or how difficult it might be to find them. Such issues are critical, for example, to cryptographers who want to break a code and need to know how many possible answers there are and whether it is feasible to test

For the past 61 years, many of the world's leading mathematicians have tried, at some point, to prove Mordell's conjecture. One school of Soviet mathematicians is said to have worked on the problem for more than two decades, and a few Americans have also worked hard on it.

Dr. Faltings built on much of this work but, apparently through a key insight, saw how it could be put together in a new way to form a striking proof of Mordell's conjecture. The proof is described by American experts as indirect, and difficult for mathematicians who are not versed in algebraic geometry to understand.

On the way to proving Mordell's conjecture, Dr. Faltings also proved at least two other conjectures, depending on how they are counted. He also gives a partial solution for a classic problem of arithmetic that has defied solution for more than 300 years, proof of the so-called last theorem of Fermat. The 17th-century French mathematician Fierre de Fermat scribbled in the margins of a book that he could prove that a certain form of equation had only a very small number of solutions, but he never provided the proof and no one has been able to reproduce it. For all anybody knew, the number of solutions could be infinite. Now Dr. Faltings has proved that the solutions are finite, a big step in Fermar's

The Faltings paper is so new that its implications are not yet fully clear. In one sense, the West German has simply proved conjectures that most mathematicians already believed. But the proof gives mathematicians new confidence in using the conjectures, and the techniques used in the proof are expected to have application in a wide variety of fields, opening up a whole range of problems to new solutions. "It's bound to lead to practical applications that are not obvious at the moment," said Ronald Graham, director of the mathematics research center of Bell Laboratories in Murray Hill, New Jersey. "When you knock off one of the old classical problems, it's something like a four-minute mile. It's a significant step forward." amine through the skin over just the right period of time.

WALL STREET WATCH AT&T Net

By EDWARD ROHRBACH

Templeton's Investment Principles Are Still Worth Considering Today

Gloom and doom were thick last summer on Wall Street. Anyone detecting light at the end of the tunnel, the majority scoffed, was only seeing the beam of an oncoming express train.

It was just a year ago that John Templeton, appearing as guest expert on the U.S. television program "Wall Street Week," said that chances favored the Dow Jones average reaching 3,000 by 1988. Pethaps even holder was the prediction that not again in the lifetime of the TV andience would stock prices be as low as they were in 1982. The Dow then was partly financed his education at Yale on poker winnings, called Fenner & Beane and told his broker to buy $100 worth of every stock on both major exchanges selling for no more than $1 a share. And in a really gutsy move, he borrowed $10,000 from his boss for the purchases.

Naturally, Mr. Templeton bought what looked and smelled like a junk pile: 104 companies, 37 of them bankrupt. But he held each stock for an average of four years and realized a profit of $40,000 --- four times his cost. Only four stocks turned out to be worthless and within a year he paid back his loan.

But Mr. Templeton's reputation as one of the most skilled stock market investors of all time is based on performance over the years. His Templeton Growth Fund showed a 15 percent annual rate of return in the 20 years from 1962, tripling the annualized return from the Dow average.

Mr. Templeton, though willing to take risks, has always reflected his small-town Tennessee upbringing, where qualities like thrift were a mark of character. His guiding investment principle, as identified by John Train in the book "Money Masters," is bargain luming — searching out companies selling for the smallest fraction of their true worth.

The second most important guideline, as stated in a recent biography, "The Templeton Touch," by William Proctor, is diversity. It is recommended that every serious investory own at least 10 stocks; if that is not feasible, then shares in a mutual fund should be bought.

Mr. Templeton thirdly trees investors to develop a strong social and political awareness, namely avoiding heavily regulated companies or companies in socialist countries where the entrepreneurial spirit is stifled. Flexibility and patience rank as the next most important principles, followed by a "friendship network" to help in keeping abreast and

The last few principles listed are personal traits, reflecting again Mr. Templeton's inner drive and religious roots. They involve positive thinking and the need to keep out unproductive thoughts. The 10th principle is simplicity. Avoid complications, he says, and look for basic contrarian rules such as:

 The best bargains are what others are selling. • When companies or industries are on the front page, it's too late to

Seasonal Drifting

Peter Stevense, director of securities research at Bank Mees & Hope, Amsterdam, reckons that Wall Street will do little more than "drift up and down" over the next month, reflecting summer's seasonal trading Profit-taking then could buffet the market, he said, as U.S. investors celebrate the bull market's first birthday by taking long-term capital gains, which are taxed at a lower rate.

"But intermediate and long hant, the direction of stocks is up," he asserted. "What should do no more than disturb Wall Street from time to time over the next six to 12 months is uncertainty whether the Federal Reserve will tighten money and perhaps push up interest rates."

Allowing that rates may "go up slightly," he predicted they will remain within a "fai. 'y narrow range" in the year ahead with "not much scope to go down.

He said the stocks that Mees & Hope is adding to its portfolio are headed by the consumer durable group, notably General Motors and Ford. And because he thinks consumers have also deferred purchases of appliances, he has put Whirlpool on the buy list.

AMF is also a favorite, he said, as are IBM, Hewlett-Packard and Digital Equipment, because their "earnings are much more reliable, the result of better product mix and marketing" than for smaller technology companies though "even might have a real winner here in heturers"

Hulbert Financial Digest, which tracks the leading market advisory letters, ranks the Prudent Speculator as the top performer of 1983's first half. Stocks it recommends —on a fully margined exposure to the market — roared ahead 78 percent, quadrupling the NYSE composite.

Up 10.5% In Quarter

NEW YORK - American Telephone & Telegraph Co. said Wednesday its second-quarter profit climbed 10.5 percent from a year earlier on an 8.3 percent reve-

AT&T, which is scheduled to be broken up on Jan. I, said earnings rose to $1.93 billion, or $2.03 a share, from $1.75 billion, or $2.04 a share, a year earlier.

The one-cent drop in per-share profit statumed from AT&T having 11.5 percent more common shares outstanding in the latest quarier, 933.2 million compared with 837.2 million a year earlier.

In the latest quarter, AT&T said its results included a one-time charge of $96.5 million related to the consolidation of Western Electric Co.'s distribution and repair

But it also said that charge was more than offset by a $217 million gain related to a reduction in Pacifc Telephone & Telegraph Co.'s back-tax liability.

Second-quarter revenue rose to $17.5 hillion from $16.1 hillion AT&T's results for the first six months of the year trailed those of year earlier, however.

The company said first-half 1983 profit slipped 2.4 percent to $3.67 billion, or $3.91 a share, from $3.76 billion, or $4.44 a share, in the comparable 1982 period. Sixmonth revenue rose 8 percent to $34.3 billion from $31.8 billion.

AT&T said its first-half 1982 results included a previously reported accounting change for certain deferred income taxes. Without that change, per-share earnings a year earlier would have been $4.10, T&T said.

Under an antitrust settlement AT&T reached with the Justice Depertment in January 1982, AT&T s scheduled to divest its 22 teleione operating companies on Jan. I of next year.

Western Electric Cuthack

Western Electric Co. said Wednesday that the consolidation of its distribution and repair opera-tions in seven states would affect between 800 and 900 employees, Renters reported from New York. Western Electric said service nter operations in Ohio, Indiana, Teras and Utah would be consolidated, as would 13 smaller supply distribution operations in California, Kentucky, Texas and Illinois.

AT&T Braces for Breakup

Divestiture No Longer Looks Like Sweet Deal

By Andrew Pollack New York Times Service

NEW YORK — When the Instice Department settled its 7-year-old antitrust suit against American Telephone & Telegraph early last year, the initial perception was that the nation's largest company had hoodwinked the government. Somehow, AT&T, threatened with loss of the lawsuit, had managed to pull off a deal that left it with the most profitable parts of the telecommunications business, while foisting its dead wood onto the lumbering local operating companies. A trimmed down AT&T was suddenly free to enter whatever business it chose and seemed destined to become a high-tech powerhouse, taking on IBM and the Japanese in a battle for supremacy in the multibillion-dollar information processing indus-

But in the 18 months since the breakup was announced, that perception has changed markedly. While some of the operating companies are still expected to have financial trouble after they spin off Jan. 1, their outlook suddenly seems brighter

The spoiler has been Judge Harold H. Greene who presided over the antitrust case and has had remarkable power to alter the original government agreement with AT&T. The judge's last blow came July 8, when he ordered AT&T to give up the Bell name to the operating companies, thus stripping Ma Bell of an identity it has had virtually since Alexander Graham Bell invented the telephone.

But an even bigger problem for AT&T has been its stumbling efforts to enter new, competitive markets this year, especially through its newly minted American Bell marketing unit. A manage-ment shakeup at American Bell, plus an expected loss of market share in telephone equipment sales at AT&T's Western Electric manufacturing arm have made the company's prospects distinctly uncertain. And analysts who once billed AT&T stock as the surest of bets for widows and orphans, now seem to be reassessing their recommendations.

"We recommend the operating companies, not AT&T," said Harry Edelson of First Boston Corp. And Steven Chrust of Sanford C. Bernstein & Co. said the operating companies "are in great shape," especially when compared to electric utilities. "The telephone company itself isn't doing too well." The changing perception of the divestiture is, in way, a vindication for AT&T chairman Charles

L. Brown, who said from the start that the divested companies "are not dogs."
"AT&T is the one that is going to have a tough couple of years," he said in a recent interview. The chairman seemed bitter about the breakup of AT&T: "I guess the competition feels pretty good about it, the Japanese primarily," he said.

But one should not necessarily weep for AT&T.
According to a decision issued by Judge Greene before the case was settled, the company had violated antitrust laws.

"If you violate the law, the shareholders should be punished," said William G. McGowan, chair-man of MCI Communications, an archival of AT&T that has won a private antimust suit against the phone giant.

Problems for the New A.T.A.T.

it's Losing Market Share In Long-Distance Sales...

Switchboard Business

It is somewhat ironic, however, that the public may suffer along with AT&T, as local rates rise to cancel out the benefits of having more equipment choices and reducing long-distance rates that the divestiture will bring about.

Under the terms of the divestiture settlement, AT&T is required to give up its 22 local operating companies, which will be spun off as seven regional companies. The parent company will keep the profitable long-distance business, Western Electric, as well as Bell Laboratories. It also has the chance to enter any business it chooses, escaping a 1956 consent decree that bound it to regulated telephone business.

The new dire view of AT&T's prospects is probably exaggerated. AT&T can afford to pump billions of dollars into developing new businesses without wincing and eventually the company is likely to be at least a modest success in its new

But so far, American Bell, which in January began AT&T's first thrust into deregulated businesss, has been having trouble. Five months after it started, part of American Bell was shifted back into Western Electric, and a top executive, Archie J. McGill, brought in from IBM to help AT&T's transition into competitive markets, resigned when his responsibilities were eliminated in the shift.

American Bell is not a creation of the antitrust settlement, but of an earlier FCC order that allowed AT&T to sell equipment and data processing services through a subsidiary that would not be subsidized by other AT&T operations.

Since the creation of American Bell, it has experienced a series of misfortunes. Its first product, a data communications network known as Net 1, had to be renamed to Net 1000 when it was found that another company was already using the name. Now American Bell itself will have to change its name under Judge Greene's latest order. With 28,000 employees and no existing custom (Continued on Page 9, Col.3)

Yugoslav Credit Advances

BERN —A group of about 600 Western banks are near agreement on a $4.5 billion financial package aimed at shoring up Yugoslavia's ailing conomy, a key figure in the talks said Wednesday.

Recently, however, American Bell has shown some signs of improvement. It has introduced a new phone system for small businesses and a new version of the PBX that "took care of all the gripes the industry had," according to Alan Fross, vice president of the Eastern Management Group, a consulting firm. Mr. Brown of AT&T said the company is now winning the majority of of competitive battles in

What American Bell still lacks are computer products. "What they need is a knockout product like the IBM Personal Computer," said Mr. Edelson of First Boston. But it is not clear when that will come. Sources say one computer in the works at Western Electric is a multi-user microcomputer based on Bell's 32-bit microprocessor, scheduled for introduction early Western Electric, meanwhile, faces challenges of its own. About 90 percent of its sales, which totaled $12.6 billion in 1982, were to the Bell operating companies. After divestiture, the operating compa-nies will be much more willing to buy equipment from other compa-nies.

Western has already organized along lines of business to enter new markets. In addition to continuing to sell products ranging from cen-tral office switches to consumer telephones, it is expanding into sales of semiconductors, computer hardware and software and possi-bly other products like medical component. ### Belgian Company to Sign Contract With China on Telephone Equipment

BRUSSELS (Reuters) — A Belgian company has secured a contract with China to manufacture telephone equipment there, a Belgian Foreign Ministry spokesman said Wednesday.

As part of a $250-million transaction, Bell Telephone Manufacturing Co., a Belgian affiliate of International Telephone & Telegraph, will also sell China 100,000 digital telephone lines and will set up a joint venture Bell Labs. There has been some with the Chinese post office to build a factory in Shanghai to produce concern expressed that with 300,000 lines a year, he said. The Belgian government will lend China $12 AT&T's shrinking, support for the million over the next two years to help it buy the equipment and will also participate in the joint venture. The contract is to be signed July 30.

The project, under negotiation for several years and fighting competition from French companies, had brought objections from the United States because of the transfer of technology involved.

Thyssen, Krupp Assessment Delayed

ESSEN, West Germany (Renters) — A major financial assessment of the two leading West German steelmakers. Thyssen and Krupp, originally due at midyear, will be delayed until fall, Krupp's chief executive, Wilhelm Scheider, said Wednesday.

The two industrial groups have for months been trying to agree on the earnings potential and assets of their steel divisions with a view to amalgamation. An independent panel in January proposed that Thyssen and Krupp merge to form a giant "Rhine" group as part of a plan to help the West German steel industry cope with a depressed market and subsidized foreign steel. subsidized foreign steel.

Mr. Scheider, speaking at a news conference, said that the panel's report remained the only comprehensive proposal for restructuring the steel industry and that a Thyssen-Krupp merger promised the greatest rationalization and productivity.

CDF of France Reports 1982 Losses

PARIS (Reuters) — The state-owned coal and chemical group Charbonnage de France announced Tuesday a loss of 985.2 million francs (about $126.5 million) in 1982, almost four times its losses for 1981. The increased deficit occurred despite a doubling of government subsidies to CDF last year to 3.4 billion francs, the group said. Although expected, the heavy loss is expected to intensify debate over the future of recover nearly $1 million paid to asbestos victims.

The suit seeks $768,361 the company paid to 50 victims who worked in Navy shipyards during World War II and $185,741 in legal expenses. The company argues that the government was responsible for exposing the workers to dangerous levels of asbestos fibers, which can cause lung disease and cancerous tumors and that the Navy and other government agencies knew of the dangers but still failed to act.

Effects of Gas Decontrol Predicted

WASHINGTON (WP) - The 16 largest U.S. oil companies would collect an extra $1.8 billion to $4.2 billion in the first year if federal price controls on natural gas were lifted entirely, according to unreleased figures compiled by the Energy Department.

The figures, compiled by the Energy Information Administration, spell out how each of the 16 major oil companies, which own 54 percent of the nation's gas reserves, would fare if the Reagan administration succeeded in deregulating natural gas.

Compagnie Générale d'Electricité

At their meeting on 7 July, 1983, the Board of Directors of C.G.E. considered the Group's consolidated accounts for the 1982 financial year.

With a view to preparing for the issue of share certificates next Autumn, the consolidated accounts for 1982, in accordance with the auditor's recommendations, were closed using a method comprising in particular a more restrictive definition to their coverage and a standardization of consolidation rules.

The consolidated result of the companies include in the new consolidated accounts coverage amounted to 638 million French francs, an increase of about 24% companied to the figure for the previous year. This increase is largely due to the long-term exceptional gains realized during the year. The published result for 1981, using the old method, was 586 million francs.

The Group's part of the consolidated result amounts to 450 million francs, an increase of 32% compared to the 1981 figure. It represents FF.56.80 per C.G.E.

The gross self-financing morgin, which is the total of the consolidated result and appropriation to depreciation, amounts to 2363 million francs, on increase of 18.5% over the comparable figure for the previous year.

The Group's consolidated financing program shows that investments for the financial year, amounting to 3454 million francs and including 2253 million francs of tangible fixed assets, were 95% self-financed in the amount of 3304 million francs available after dividend distribution and sale of assets.

Increases of cepital amounted to 909 million francs, including 254 million francs from the conversion of convertible bonds; borrowings with interest represented 500 million francs; the convertible bond liability was reduced by 193 million francs; other long and medium-term debts increased by 320 million francs. The permanent outside capital was thus increased to 1536 million francs.

Personal Income, Spending in U.S. Increase in June

WASHINGTON - Personal income for Americans rose 0.5 per-cent in June, less than half the gain in the previous month, the govern-ment reported Wednesday.

And consumers increased their spending 1 percent, also a smaller advance than in May, according to the Commerce Department report.

Details of the report included:

After climbing 1.1 percent or $30.1 billion in May, personal income rose $13.4 billion last month to an annual rate of $2.734 trillion. Disposable, or after-tax, in-come increased 0.4 percent or $8.6 billion after rising 0.7 percent or $16.7 billion in May.

The I percent increase in con-sumer spending, which includes most expendingres except interest on installment credit, put spending at an annual rate of $2.238 trillion. It had risen 1.6 percent in May, which in turn was 1.8 percent higher than in April.

Personal savings fell to an annual rate of $75.4 billion in June, compared with $88.1 billion in

THE QUEST FOR THE RED PRINCE

By Michael Bar-Zohar and Eitan Haber. 232 pp. Illustrated. $15.95.

Reviewed by James M. Markham

LI Hassan Salameh, one of Yasir Arafat's A most trusted lieutenants, was blown up in his car as it passed a booby-trapped parked Volkswagen in West Beirut on Jan. 22, 1979. In "The Quest for the Red Prince," Michael Rar-Zohar and Eitan Haber, two Israeli writers, give a fast-paced account of how the Mostad, the Israeli intelligence service, tracked Salameh for months and assassinated him. They have also tried to blend into the tale of the Palestinian leader's violent life and death a history of the struggle between Arabs and Jews in Palestine before 1948, in the young state of Israel and in shadowy theaters of operation else-

Abu Hassan, as the flamboyant el-Fatah chief was known, was the son of Sheikh Hassan Salameh, a Palestinian warlord who died in 1948 fighting the emergence of Israel. The sheikh's son was no scruffy, unshaven gun-toter but a sleek German-educated playboy who shortly before his death married a former Miss Universe, a Lebanese Christian named Georgina Rizak. He was also a terrorist, one of pasterminds of Black September, the Fatah subgroup that shoved the Palestinian cause into the world's horrified consciousness by murdering 11 Israeli athletes during the Munich Olympics in 1972.

But Salameh's most fascinating sideline and the one most relevant to his death is not mentioned in this book. As the boss of Squad 17. the Fatah security outfit, he was Arafat's contact with the U.S. Embassy in Beirut and the Central Intelligence Agency. While Bar-Zohar and Haber would have us believe that in "The Muslim-inhabited part of war-torn Beirnt all foreigners were distrusted" and "all Westerners were suspected of being Israeli spies or secret agents," the truth was far more subtle and paradoxical. During Arafat's persistent efforts to open a dialogue with the United States, Fatah took it on itself to protect U.S. diplomats in chaotic West Beirnt after civil war crupted in 1975. Salameh's men guarded Americans and other foreigners as they were evacuated from a West Beirut seaside swimming club by the U.S. Sixth Fleet on June 20, 1976. An American diplomat I knew in Beirut in those bizarre years liked to show off with a chuckle a gift from Abu Hassan - a heavy Palestinian Liberation Organization key chain.

As David Ignatius reported recently in The Wall Street Journal, Salameh was "a backdoor channel between the U.S. and the PLO," and he furnished senior American dinlomats inchiding former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, with tips about assassination plots planned by radical Palestinian and other terrorist groups. He is also said to have supplied similar information to security organizations in West Germany, Italy and Japan to demonstrate that Fatah had gone out of the terror business and become a valid diplomatic interlocutor. One revealing and heretofore untold anecdote is that not long before Salameh's death, a grateful CIA took him 10 Florida's Walt Disney World, a place he had always wanted to visit This uniquely American gesture com-pounded Arafar's bitterness and sense of betrayal when Salameh was slain.

There was nothing angelic about Fatah's stealthy overtures to the United States. Salameh was no CIA agent. What Arafat and he wear offering was, after all, the other hand of terrorism: protection from it in the roiled Mid-dle East. But it is perhaps reasonable to assume that a budding Palestinian-American relation-ship, however unsavory its genesis, was not comforting to Prime Minister Menachem Regit, who came to power in Israel in 1977.
President Jimmy Carter was then on record as favoring "a homeland provided for the Palestinian refugees who have suffered for many, many years." Carter had outraged Israelis by meeting with President Hafez al-Assad of Syria, on the eve of the election that brought Begin to office.

Bar-Zohar and Haber say that the Mossad. ended its assassination campaign against Black September terrorist chieftains in 1973 after a botched operation in which Israeli agents were arrested in Norway for killing an innocent Moroccan waiter whom they mistook for Salameh. Arafat disbanded Black September in the same year. The authors contend that some five years later the Begin government revived plans to kill Salameh for what were essentially emo-tional reasons. "Israel felt that no terrorist with blood on his hand could be left in peace," they write. "In the late 1970s Salameh's name was. on the avengers' list once again."

But a risky and meticulously planned assassination is usually not just an act of passion or vengeance. A more cynical and rational explanation of the Salameh killing would be that it was meant to disrupt Fatah's fitful secret dialogue with the United States, which, as Kissinger tells us in his memoirs, was initiated inger tells us in his memoirs, was initiated by Arafat in the aftermath of the 1973 Middle East war. The secretary of state's secret envoy, Vernon Walters, met with an unnamed Arafat confidant — almost certainly Salameh — in Rabat, Morroco, on Nov. 3 "to gain time and to prevent radical assaults on the early peace process." "Afterwards," Kissinger con attacks on Americans - at least by Arafat's faction of the PLO—ceased." Kissinger made a point of having key Arabs and Israelis briefed on the clandestine PLO encounter. In the ensuing peace talks in 1974 and 1975, Israel extracted a pledge from the United States not to negotiate with the PLO until the PLO recognized Israel's right to exist.

Building Boats and Building Tradition By Dave Anderson

New York Times Service

BRISTOL Rhode Island -Old saltbox houses are set back on old leafy streets in this tiny town snuggled in a small harbor, a half-hour by car from the Newport docks where the America's Cup yachts are strung up like mariins and a half-century from the tourists in Newport's bontiques and lobster restaurants. For all of Newport's fame as the home of the most one-sided event in sports history, much of the heritage of the America's Cup is here in a little gray clapboard workshop and museum, literally a stone's throw across Hope Street from the water.

The strong smell of burning resin, an aroma to a yachtsma an odor to anyone else, rose from where two boat builders at the Herreshoff Manufacturing Co. were putting an engine into the hull of a small sailboat.

hull of a small sattboat.

"That's an Alerion they're working on, my grandfather's design," said Halsey Herreshoff, glancing out a window of his third-floor office. "But do you see those old wooden ways out there on the beach? That's where my grandfather designed and built the yachts that defended the America's Cup six times."

Those yachts of Nathaniel G.
Herreshoff, known as the wizard of Bristol, retained the cup from 1893 to 1920 in six of the 24 challenges, And now Halsey Herreshoff, in his seventh America's Cop season as a crewman,is expected in September to be the navigator of whichever 12-meter defends the cup, named for the yacht that proved in 1851 that Brittania no longer ruled the waves. "The challenger has a definite chance this year," Herreshoff said. "Twe thought that as onesided as the record is, 24-0, it can't go on forever.'

At 47, Herreshoff is as lean as a mast. He had on khaki shorts and a navy blue yachting shirt with "Freedom'83" in small red lettering, identifying the group that sponsors both Freedom and Liberty in the current trials. He's expected to be competing in his

Down at its Newport dock, some mystery surrounds Australia II, the yacht likely to be the challenger. In order to keep the design of its keel a secret, the keel is covered with a greenish shroud when Australia II is out of the water. But the Freedom '83 people think they know what's under the shroud.

"We understand it's a bulb keel with some fins," Herreshoff said. "It's different, but they've got nothing to lose."

He was walking out toward his little red BMW parked at the curb. He was on his way to a meeting of the town council, of which he is a member. Wherever he goes in Bristol, townspeople ask him about the America's Cup. "They all want to know if we're going to keep it, Herreshoff said, "We will."

■ Defender Leads Trials

The yacht Defender scored a two-minute, 40-second victory over Liberty on Tuesday, the fourth day of renewed trials for the America's Cup defense, The Associated Press reported from Newport, Rhode Island. It was the biggest winning margin since the second series of observation trials began Saturday for three U.S. yachts.

Liberty had won two races from Defender on Saturday, but after a protest by Defender's skipper, Tom Blackaller, the race committee reversed one of Liberty's victories over Defender. Defender now has won four trial heats and lost two. Liberty is

1-3 and Conrageous is 2-2. Seven challengers from five foreign nations have completed two series of a dozen races each in eliminations to qualify the challenging boat for the September finals. The third round-robin series for challengers, 18 races per boat, will begin Wednesday and

ZURICH - West Germany Britain and Yugoslavia on Wednesday joined the defending champion United States in the quarterfinals of the Federation Cup women's tennis competition. West Germany will play Britain which downed Brazil on singles victories by Virginia Wade and Jo Durie. The second-seeded West Germans used singles triumphs by Eva Pfaff and Bettina Bunge to key their triumph over Japan. The Americans, advancing against Sweden on victories by Candy Reynolds and Andrea Jacger, will meet Yugoslavia, which stopped China when Sabrina Goles and Renata Sasak won. Other nations gaining the quarterfinals were Australia (defeating Mexico), Ar-gentina (over Hungary), Czecho-slovakia (over Italy), and Switzerland (over Romania).

The Questions of Edmond Jabès

By Jason Weiss

D ARIS - Anything I can say I doesn't involve the responsi bility of my books," said Edmond Jabes. "You have to read them it's they that speak." Entering the spiraling depths of his work may not be easy, but paths are illumined by the steady lights of wisdom and compassion. And he lives his writing thoroughly, hands animating the persistent figures of his thought.

For "The Book of Questions" is like no other book. That's clear immediately. Even the literary critics cannot place it. Poets, philosophers, Jewish scholars, none can claim it.

"The Book of Questions" is seven volumes really, and with the three subsequent volumes of The Book of Resemblances, they make up one work, more than 20 years in the writing. When Jabes, 70, began it, he was completely in the dark. He didn't know where it was taking him, only that it was leading him away from the illustrious tradition of French literature that he had spent most his life as a poet becoming a part of.

"Every work is a wager with oneself." Jabes said. "For me writing is the adventure to live. It's not worth writing if one doesn't take the risk it involves."

The aphoristic intensity of the books is their most prominent feature; there is little narrative line, less in the later volumes, and that caught in glimpses. Above all, there is questioning: of lan-guage, Judaism, life, death. The first books, which form a trilogy, are, Jabes said, "the story of Sarah and Yukel, two lovers that are deported from France and who return from the concentration camps as broken survivors. A multitude of fictional rabbis "enter and question, question," seldom reappearing. Though the manner of pro-

Receiving a French education there, Jahes was writing at an early age, publishing his first books of poetry in Egypt and France. But the resident European colony in Cairo, small and socially airtight, impelled him periodically to seek the greatest contrast possible, the desert.

"In the life we lead," Jabes said, "listening practically doesn't exist. Well, the desert is listening pushed to the extreme, and to which you can't even re-spond with words. It's a silence that cuts you off from speech. The desert lifted off of me all that was too much. As in writing one lifts away everything to get to a word that's more profound."

Though he saw Nasser's rise to power as a necessary response to English colonialism, it meant that as a Jew he could not remain long in Cairo. Forced to leave in 1957, Jabès settled with his wife and two daughters in Paris. "It was itself on my books."

In the end, "the book had become a real place for me." Having been exiled, he was struck by a similarity between the Jew and sands of years, since obliged to leave one place for another each time, what did he do? He made the book his true home." The readership of "The Book of Questions" attests to Jabes' achievement most of all, to his desire to find a word of truth Young people especially, in France and abroad, have taken up the books. Many of France's leading writers and thinkers devoted essays to the first volume when it appeared in 1963.

All this still tends to surprise Jabes. His modesty is no pose. When he was awarded the prestigious Prix des Critiques in 1970 and his publisher, Gallimard, asked if they should mention it on his books, he said, "Not at all, that has nothing to do with the work." In 1982, he was awarded another important prize, the Prix des Arts, des Lettres et des Sciences, from the Fondation du Judaisme Francais.

While Jabes carries his questioning further in new books, his work is being translated into many languages. The first six vol-umes of "The Book of Questions" have appeared from Wesleyan University Press, and a selection from his poetry, "Te Bâtis Ma Demeure" (I Build My Dwell-ing), from 1959, has been pub-lished by The Menand Press, Lon-

In his faithful obsession with the word, labes reaps the human truths rooted in us all. "I deeply believe that since Auschwitz in general, the word is wounded. And that our speech is different. We cannot escape it. If you have an ear that's very attuned to what people are able to say to each other today, you hear behind it something that has been deeply affected. The words say the same things obviously, but at the same time they tell their injury.

"We are very fragile beings now. And we can only speak with and from this fragility. We know that there have been such thin... accepted that in fact it puts everything in question, even culture. To Adorno, the German philosopher, who has said that we cannot Write of er Anschwitz, I say that the writer, "The Jew, not having we must write.
